

Yale Promises Gridiron Furor—Peerless Plays Today—Acosta Wins

LOOKING 'EM OVER

BY
LOUIS A. DOUGHER

"Hell Fire and Brimstone"

Yale has grown tired of being banged and bounced around on the gridiron. That's what Tad Jones was coaxed away from building ships out on Oregon, or Alaska, or wherever he's been keeping himself, and is coming back East. The Callahan, captain and varsity center, has received a touching letter from Jones. One of the touching statements he read was that "only those willing to go through hell-fire and brimstone for Yale" should sign on the dotted line and accept a uniform. He, furthermore, remarks in this letter that he's going to be rough on those who don't return to Yale expecting a rough season. Things are looking up at New Haven.

For years and years, wise mothers around Boston used to hear about the "fellow Yale eleven" and would caution each other: "Don't send your son to Yale; they'll kill him for you." Those were the years when Yale football eleven were known all over the country as the greatest in the game, made up of giants, eating raw beef three times a day, able to play with broken ribs, and always intent on breaking their rivals' backs. As for Harvard—well, Harvard eleven were made up of "gentlemen," which in street parlance of the day meant rather weak folk.

Then came the bald-headed Percy Haughton into Harvard athletics. Percy failed to live up to his name. He proved to be a two-handed guy, and gradually two-handed guys began making the Harvard varsity eleven and then began that parade of victories for the sons of John Harvard over the sons of Elihu Yale. The shoe was on the other foot.

Last year much was expected of Al Sharpe. He had graduated from Yale athletics himself, playing football, basketball, and rowing on the crew. He had coached with success at Germantown Academy, and, later, at Cornell. He failed to reach expectations and then, answering a mighty demand from every undergraduate and from the sands of alumni, Tad Jones agreed to coach the 1920 varsity squad.

BELIEVES IN PRAYER.

When Center College players knelt on the grass and prayed before lining up against West Virginia last fall, the prayer was spread all over creation. But Tad Jones, who's going to provide the Blue with "hell-fire and brimstone," did that himself years ago when he was Yale all-American basketball player. In union there is strength. It required less courage on the part of the Center College squad to do that praying last year than it did for Tad Jones to do it by himself. And Tad Jones is a two-handed guy. He knows football. He knows men. Given a likely squad, able to stand the pace, Jones should give Yale something like an old-time football team for the coming campaign. Signs of relief went up from thousands of Yale men when it was announced that Jones would accept the coaching job. And if Yale has any luck in his big game, Jones is likely to have a lot of trouble getting back to his shipyard.

Yale has at least two grudge games on its 1920 schedule, not mentioning either Harvard or Princeton. Boston College and Princeton, the terrors to walloper the Elis last year, is due for a whaling on October 18. Colgate, which has triumphed over the Blue, is booked for a licking on October 25. It all right to lose to Harvard or Princeton, but it's too much when the little fellows hop in and turn the trick.

Anyway, Tad Jones' letter gives the football world some insight into what he expects from the Elis this fall. It promises to be a rough year for Yale's gridiron opponents.

DEMPSY WILL BE BUSY.

Beginning with his Labor Day battle against Billie Miska, Jack Dempsey is planning a busy campaign in the ring for the coming winter. Incidentally, he expects to clean up $225,000 in his first three contests.

Dempsey has been guaranteed $50,000 for the first contest at the Revere Beach, scene of many a tough fight in the days of London prize ring rules, will have Dempsey meet Gunboat Smith, or some other stiff equally important.

After the Revere Beach exhibition, Dempsey will go to New York to tackle Bill Brennan, the Chicago heavyweight challenger. This Brennan scrap promises to be the best of the three. Though Miska has grown heavier since last he faced Dempsey, few followers of the ring game believe he has much of a chance to upset the champion.

After meeting Brennan, Dempsey will still have Fred Fulton, Harry Willis, and Georges Carpentier for future opponents. If he can keep going and keep winning, the champion should clean up close to a million rials in a year, which is fair enough, kind air, fair enough.

TROUBLE IN THE CAMP.

W. S. Farnsworth writes in today's New York American as follows: "A serious rift has developed between Miller Huggins and several Yankee players is said to have taken place in the clubhouse at the Polo Grounds following the game with the White Sox on Thursday afternoon. Rumor has it that Babe Ruth, especially, 'rode' the manager good and plenty.

The row is said to have been caused by Huggins' assigning George Mogridge to pitch the opening game against the American League leaders. The rebelling players seemed to be of the opinion that either Maye or Quinn should have been the pitching selection for such an important game.

"Despite the fact that the Chicago team has lost a lead, the majority of the local players believe that they still have a chance of meeting the National League pennant winners in the world's series. The row really was patched up overnight, for in yesterday's game the Yankees displayed an unusual amount of 'pop' in defeating the White Sox in a five-and-a-half-inning struggle.

Trouble in the Yankee camp has been foreshadowed for several months. In July it was whispered

Finland and America Are Here Shown Making Olympic Records

Jonni Myrta, of Finland, the world's champion javelin thrower, is seen here breaking all previous records for flinging the spear at the Antwerp Olympiad.

Landon, Yale's great high jumper, is here seen coming down after clearing the cross-bar for a new record of 6 feet 4.5 inches at Antwerp.

TIGERS END STAY IN CAPITAL TODAY

Jennings' Gang Will Try to Get Even Break by Defeating Griff's Lads.

The Detroit Tigers today play their last game in Washington this season. They will endeavor to make an even break in the series by coping today for Howard Ehmke more than met his match in Jose Acosta, the half-pint Cuban singer. The wee chap pitched steadily all the way and, backed up by sterling support on the part of Shanks, Ellerbe, Harris, and Judge, put the bee on the Junglers, 3 to 1. A double by Harris, with a single by Shanks and O'Neill's sacrifice, put over the first run for the Griff's in the second. Judge's single, followed by Ehmke's well peg on Milan's roller, Rice's infield death, and Roth's long throw, made the Griff's lead in the third. Aside from those two innings, the Griff's found Ehmke a tantalizing cuss, too mystifying for any scoring. Singles by Young and Bush, followed by Cobb's double, gave the Griff's their one run in the fifth. At all other times Acosta was too big a midget for them.
